

Choppers

Jack had just ordered his Big Mac at McDonalds and was waiting for his order when he saw a couple enter the restaurant, her on a walker and him on a cane. They walked up to the counter and the old gentleman asked, "I'd like one hamburger."

The clerk responded, "Do you want a hamburger or a Big Mac?"

"Just a hamburger."

The clerk added, "Do you want a meal or just a hamburger? "

"Just a hamburger."

The clerk asked one last question. "Do you want one hamburger or two?"

"Just one. "

"Okay, one burger coming up."

Before the clerk could ring up the charge, Bill, who had been watching this interchange, walked up to couple and said, " I noticed you only ordered one hamburger. Would you let me buy a second one for your wife?"

The old gentleman turned and replied, "Thank you, sir, but we only need one. We don't eat a lot of food at our age and one hamburger will be enough for us. Thank you, anyway."

Bill's number was called by the clerk at the pick-up counter, so he went to get his meal, found a table, and began to eat his lunch. He watched the couple pick up their hamburger, sit down nearby, and open the wrapping. The wife sat quietly while her husband began to eat without offering her any.

As the husband continued to eat, Bill became more and more agitated. Finally, he couldn't stand it any longer, got up, and walked over to the couple's table and apologetically said, "I'm sorry to bother you again, but I couldn't help but notice you bought one hamburger, only you are eating, and your wife hasn't gotten anything. Won't you please let me buy another hamburger for your wife? "

The old gentleman replied, "Thank you, sir, but you don't need to do that. She will eat the other half of our hamburger when I finish with the false teeth."